OLAA'S BIG SUGAR MILL HAS COMMENCED GRINDING CANE

F. B. McStocker, Manager of Olaa Plantation.

HILO, Dec. 26.—Olaa mill is grinding cane.

Last week the machinery was tried and it worked beautifully. Manager McStocker decided at once that there should be no delay in putting the mill to actual use. At ten miles on the Volcano road one field, No. 6, was ready for cutting, another one, nearer the mill, was also ready and delay meant deterioration to the cane. Inspectors were therefore given on Saturday to put laborers to cutting; mill hands were brought to their posts at the big grey structure and instructed as to their duties; fires were started under the seven boilers long before daylight on Monday, and before seven o'clock the big fly wheel of the 400-horse-power Corliss engine revolved and the machinery responded with each movement.

At 7:30 Engineer Scott "whistled for cane." In each department of the mill, from the sugar floor to the box-out, men were overlooking the working parts that there should be no hitch in the work once the cane started through the rollers. On the concrete sugar floor, where thirty thousand tons of sugar—nearly a half million bags—will be packed for shipment before the mill closes down for the season, men were busy mopping out and hiding it of the rubbish that had collected there. Engineer Scott was here, there and everywhere, but as cool and calm as though putting into commission the second largest mill in the territory was an everyday occurrence. Manager McStocker was on hand with an eye on the flume through which the cane was to be floated from field to mill.

It was estimated that twenty-five minutes would be required for the cane to reach the mill after leaving the upper field. The second whistle was blown at 8:15 a. m., and at exactly 8:40 the first sticks passed down the chute, up through the rollers and so on through the various parts, until it became No. 1 sugar. The fact was demonstrated that sugar cane would grow in Olaa and that sufficient water could be conserved and flumed so that it would carry the cane on long distances. This in spite of the opinion of men longer in the district than either Mr. McStocker or Superintendent Macrae. There was no lack of water and only once did the flume choke up and then but a few yards from the mill, and the jam was so slight that the cane was delayed less than thirty seconds.

In the fields where the cane was being cut, as in the mill where it was being ground, everything showed life and yet there was absolutely no clashing; the laborers worked as soldiers drill and there was no idleness. J. P. Clay, the general bookkeeper, was on hand supervising the scales and putting the weighers in line to do their work in a systematic manner. Olaa mill is one of the largest in the Territory, having a capacity of 175 tons of sugar, or 1300 tons of cane per day. The juice capacity is now 30,000 gallons per day. The machinery is so arranged that the capacity may be doubled at slight additional expense. The automatic Lillie effect was tried on Saturday and developed twenty-eight inches, the highest in the history of that machine. There are seven immense boilers in the mill, and these generate the steam to run two immense Corliss, one Rawlins and one Houston-Stanwood and Gamble engines. One Corliss has a fly-wheel thirty feet in diameter, and weighing twenty tons. The machinery used in grinding the cane consists of two nine-roller mills, made by the Honolulu Iron Works, and under one roof will be found departments for sugar bagging, vacuum pans, evaporators, crystallizers, centrifugals and machine shops. In the center of the main floor is the laboratory, thoroughly equipped for business.

The mill is constructed of steel, and with the exception of the engine room, vacuum pan and crystallizer rooms, the floor is of cement. In these are tongue and groove, laid on metal girders. A series of flumes over the company's lands enables the company to bring the cane from any of the fields to the mill by water. It is the intention of Manager McStocker, however, to establish a complete system of railway, so that in the event of a breakdown in the flume cane may be transported to the mill from any part of the 20,000 acres of land.

The most improved machinery for sugar making was obtained by the company, and through the ability of Engineer Scott and his associate, Mr. Bell, it has been set up so there was not a hitch in the working on Monday. The Krausnick crusher is driven by an independent Corliss engine, and the twelve 40 by 24 centrifugals are driven by the Rawlins engine. In the boiler room is an automatic feeder with seven connections, one for each fire. The train is carried up an incline passing into the automatic feeder, by which, with the assistance of two men, the fires are attended.

The bagging room is on the naked side of the building and has a cement floor, a feature which some experienced sugar mill men object to on the score of roughness and danger to bags in dragging them across. This room has openings into a covered way, through which a spur of the Hilo Railway Company's tracks run. This is a great convenience, for it enables the company to ship its product without extra handling. The mill yard covers nearly two acres, and will soon be covered with railway tracks. It is estimated by Manager McStocker that it will require six months for milling the first crop. In addition to the cane of the Olaa Company the mill will grind 500 acres of cane from the Puna Sugar Company. Hilo Tribune.

Band Notes.

The band will not play today, but the members will make preparations to leave for Hilo on Monday at noon. Tomorrow the last concert of the year to be given here will be rendered in the Capitol grounds. The next concert after the return from Hilo, will be given on Sunday afternoon, January 12, 1902, in the Capitol grounds.

NICKEUS A PAGE AT WASHINGTON

Late Hilo Attorney Began Life in the National Capital.

Of the late Johnson Nickeus, the Tacoma Ledger of December 15 contains the following:

Mr. Nickeus was born in Washington City. He succeeded in securing the appointment of page in the national capital building in his early youth, and improved his opportunity by studying law when he was engaged in that occupation. After he had been admitted to the bar he went to Dakota while it was still a Territory and settled at Jamestown, and first engaged in the general merchandise business. Two years later he took up the practice of law and was shortly thereafter elected county commissioner. His next public office was that of member of the Territorial council, serving two terms in that position. While he was a member of the Territorial council he was instrumental in securing the passage of a bill providing for the establishment of a commission whose duty it was to locate the several State institutions, and through his influence the State Insane Hospital was located at his home city, Jamestown. He, however, was not at any time a member of the commission. The passage of this bill, which resulted in the removal of the state capital from Yankton to Bismarck, was one of the bitterest political contests ever waged in a Western State. After having been a member of the Territorial council, Mr. Nickeus served his home county, Stutsman, as prosecuting attorney.

He was appointed by Governor Mellette Attorney-General for North Dakota when it became a State. He then became a prominent candidate for the office of Judge of the United States District Court and received the recommendation of the Senators from North Dakota, the State of Dakota having by this time been divided, but his appointment was held up before it received the approval of the President, on account, it is claimed by his friends, of the railroad influence being against him. President Harrison appointed him Consul to Barranquilla, Colombia, and when Grover Cleveland was elected President he asked Mr. Nickeus to remain at his post. He declined to do this and returned to Jamestown, North Dakota, and shortly thereafter he came to Tacoma, not having been able to stand the rigorous climate of his former home.

DEATH UNEXPECTED.

Several of his friends in this city recently received letters from him in which he wrote in especially hopeful terms of the condition of his health. He had been so much improved, in fact, that Mrs. Nickeus recently went to New York to spend the holidays with her daughter, Mrs. Ralph Shultz.

Mr. Nickeus was a member of the Tacoma lodge of Elks and the A. O. U. W., and is said to have had $3000 insurance in the latter order. He is also said to have been a member of the local lodge of Maccabees.

FOR MEN WHO FREQUENT STREETS

The Murphy Club meeting for Sunday evening in Queen Emma hall will have some new and very attractive features.

Rev. W. D. Westervelt will help the club by preaching a New Year's temperance sermon on "Living Up to a Purpose." The sermon will be illustrated by a series of stereopticon views, "The Shadows of the Cross," with such exquisite pictures as "The Child of Sorrow" and "The Man of Sorrow." The music will be partly under the charge of Prof. Berger. The Francis Murphy Club orchestra will assist in rendering the hymns. One or two hymns, illustrated by stereopticon views, will be sung. The object of this meeting is to provide a home service for the men who frequent the streets.

Song and music will reign supreme at the Murphy Hall this evening. The vocalists of the club will be on hand and will entertain every one who would be present. Miss Amelia Scheuermann, a pupil of Prof. Ernest Kaal, will make her debut in a musical trio with a violin second and piano accompaniment.
